Image Description	Narration
LILY, IT Specialist, Hispanic female, early 30s. Army Reserve vet with symptoms of post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD) since returning from Iraq.	People have always been able to count on me to solve their computer problems. However, a sudden noise, or being in crowded areas, and it's like I'm back in Iraq.
MITCH, Veterinary Medical Officer (VMO), white male, mid 50s. Has arthritis in back and hips.	I've been examining cattle being imported at the border for the past 30 years. I know that I've been helping keep U.S. consumers safe. Recently, it's been getting tougher for me to get around.
ANNA, Program Analyst, Asian female, 50s or 60s. Is losing sight gradually due to macular degeneration.	I am not nearly ready to retire. I love my job, and I'm good at it. I just can't see some of the text clearly on my computer screen.
JAVIER, PPQ Officer (need to get exact title), Hispanic male, late 20s. Has recently started suffering seizures.	What I do helps keep the agency on the right track. I started having seizures a few weeks ago—can I still work?
CAROL, Supervisory Wildlife Biologist, black female, 40s or 50s. Diagnosed with cancer and undergoing chemotherapy.	I'm responsible for my team. I need to be here—and I want to be here. But with the chemo, some days are really difficult.
SARA, Administrative Assistant, white female, 30s. Has attention-deficit hyperactivity disorder (ADHD).	Everyone depends on me, and I try to focus. With the office noise and all the distractions, I can't concentrate, and I don't want to let anyone down.
AARON, Microbiologist, black male, 40s. Has recently developed a sensitivity to a few of the chemicals used in the lab.	The lab's been my second home. After all this time, I've started having bad allergic reactions to a few of the chemicals we use.
