

Moisture Requirements

The concentration of moisture and its availability in a food (referred to as water activity, or a_w) are important factors to prevent microbial growth. The bacterial cell has no mouth, and therefore its food must be in a soluble form to enter the cell through the cell wall. Without sufficient available moisture, the inflow of food and the outflow of food residues and cell body fluids would be impossible.