

Nutrient Requirements

A suitable food supply is the most important condition affecting growth of bacteria. Every living cell requires certain nutrients to multiply. These include solutions of sugars or other carbohydrates, proteins and small amounts of other materials such as phosphates, chlorides and calcium. If the food supply is removed, bacteria will not multiply.